NO PROTECTION = COSTLY REPAIRS + NO HEAT

More and more homeowners are opting for Heat Pumps. They provide a clean, comfortable source for heating and cooling year-round. Such a large investment in your home must be properly maintained and protected for maximum performance and longevity.

Unfortunately, one problem is severe weather & extreme temperatures which can cause very costly damage to your pumps. Not to mention the inconvenience of not having heat during the winter until someone can come out to fix the damage. We also have heard a few stories of the inconvenience of getting out in the middle of a blizzard trying things like dumping hot water on the fan to get it going again.

Did you know?

- If not properly protected from the elements, ice and snow can build up inside your heat pump causing expensive damages.
- If not properly protected from the elements, your heat pump could freeze and stop producing heat. If this happens in the middle of the night, you are likely to spend hundreds on an emergency technician visit.

On the market today there is a growing number of shapes and sizes of HP's. And sometimes the locations they are installed in are challenging. That is why we like to communicate with our customers to be sure that we have all the details to “customize” the model you choose. This involves measurements and photos for us. To proceed with your order we will require measurements. A guide to that is on our website at the “Contact Us” tab. We also like photos of the front and right side of the pump. We may ask for other photos & measurements.
